Pierce's Great Internal Remedy.

Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

This remedy is the result of the research of one of the Proprietors, who has been a sufferer for years and who has tried all the universally remedies and tried many physicians without relief. A trial of one bottle will convince any similar sufferer that one who has been so long acquainted with the nature and cure of these diseases is competent to prescribe for the ills that will arise from testimony to show, while many be found in our city daily. All of which proof is here filed and can be seen by any one desiring it.

Sold by all druggists, price one dollar per bottle. Liberal discount to the trade.

"A Complete Pictorial History of the Times."—"The best, cheapest, and most successful Family Paper in the Country."

Harper's Weekly.

ILLUSTRATED.

Notices of the Press.

Harper's Weekly should be in every family through the land, as a purer, more interesting, higher toned, better illustrated paper is not published in this or any other country.—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

The Weekly is the only illustrated paper of the day that is in the essential character, a newspaper; and as a national paper.—New York Herald.

The leading articles in Harper's Weekly on political topics are models of high toned discussion, and its pictorial illustrations are of the comprehensive argument of no small force.—Examiner and Chronicle, N. Y.

The Weekly has now a still larger form, a distinctive and compact form as an illustrated newspaper. Its editorials are among the most able of their kind, and its other reading matter is at once learned, entertaining, and amusing. Its illustrations are abundant and of rare excellence.—Chicago Advance, N. Y.

CONCLUSION OF MR. NEALLEY'S THOMASTON ADDRESS.

The Rockland papers speak in most complimentary terms of the finished historical address delivered at the Thomaston Centennial July 4th, by Hon. E. B. Neally of this city. We copy from the Gazette its peroration, which is worthy of the speaker and his theme:

Fellow citizens, I cannot close this address without some allusion to the great day of which we hold our celebration. It was only a year ago that with booming of cannon, with merry ringing of bells, and all the pomp and pageantry of jubilant loyalty, we celebrated the centennial birthday of the great government under which we live,—and its stupendous growth from thirteen feeble colonies, scattered along the seaboard, to a mighty nation, stretching from ocean to ocean with a population multiplied tenfold, and over every square inch of which floats the banner of every man was free and equal under the law, and at liberty to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.

The great experiment first tried on this side, the experiment of making every man, whatever his race or color, whether foreign or native, rich or poor, white or black, a responsible factor in the problem of government, had by its hundred years of successes challenged the admiration of mankind. Yet all our old time enemies, even the advocates of monarchical systems, who had prophesied doom and at our public beginnings were the readiest to recognize the triumph of free principles of such benign influence in the elevation of humanity all over the world. Foreign nations joined with us in friendly rivalry in the great exposition of our national growth.

The birth of your town is coeval with the birth of this great government whose shield has been your protection and defense.—to whose stability you are indebted for whatever of prosperity and happiness you today enjoy. The growth of this government has been your growth and advancement your prosperity. Your history has been its history in epitome. This town has been our country in a microcosm. It was your great soldier, the trusted friend of Washington, who made one of the most conspicuous central figures in the great drama of the Revolution. It was your statesman who first resisted the arrogance which was the natural fruit of chattel slavery and fell a martyr to the right of free speech on the floor of Congress. Again in our generation it was your general that effected up his life in the heroic struggle to save this government of our fathers from the ruin of a civil war. We here liberty has suffered, you have suffered. And while liberty has triumphed, there in the growth of manufactures and commerce, the giant strength which envious and strength is our national glory,—at the cradle and hearthstone of the absolute social and religious full independence, you have triumphed also.

And now shall we, citizens of a town which has enjoyed more than the common meed of prosperity, and its citizens of a great republic which has vindicated in its career the wisdom and truth of free institutions, we stand upon the threshold of a new century.

Let us remember that this half-century birthday of our nation, whose annual return will be celebrated with jubilant lips and swelling hearts, has its value only as commemorating the adoption into our national polity of the principles of the Declaration of Independence. It has so have followed these principles that we have achieved national glory. It is as well we depart from them that we have suffered national humiliation and sorrow.

Men die and their works with them. This have passed away, as hardly less transitory than Waymouth's crosses, its sites upon the same historic spot, the block-houses of Fort St. George, and the stately mansion of Gen. Knox. Even the parchment on which the Declaration of Independence has become illegible and illegible with the lapse of years. But principles never die nor grow old; and so running all through our history, like the arteries that give to the human body its beauty and health and vigor—sustaining the revolutionists in their poverty, in repeated disasters, and the rigor of winter quarters—animating the infant republic to take up arms a second time to resist the first encroachment on their new-born freedom;—quiet, like a sleeping lion, in the peaceful, palmy days of the early union;—vindicated, triumphant in our day in the fearful abatement of a civil war;—the hope and sheet anchor of our children for the future,—fresh and life-giving to-day as when the bell on Independence Hall proclaimed liberty to the world and the inhabitants thereof, the great, simple truths of those sturdy old colonists of seventy-six, that all men are created equal, and endowed by their Creator, with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

And as we go forth to the good or ill that awaits us down the new century, God grant both our town and nation that these immortal principles, so sure and steadfast a guide in the years past, may be our safeguard and bulwark immovable in the years to come.

Top Dressing Orchards.—The London Garden says: "Top dressing can be applied to orchard trees or grass with the perfect confidence that improved crops will follow, although the grass itself may be the first to show the benefit of top dressing. There is before us an instance of an orchard of apple trees planted on thin gravelly soil; the trees were covered with moss and stunted, although not by any means old (about 25 years). The grass of the orchard had been mown year after year for the sake of fodder, thus exhausting the soil more than the trees did. A rather rough system of top-dressing was inaugurated at a sacrifice of appearances; all sorts of refuse material were wheeled or carted into the orchard and spread over the surface; such as sifted coal ashes, old decayed tan, the old soil and rubbish from the potting bench, sweepings and scrapings of roads, etc., until a considerable quantity of material had accumulated. The first result was a troublesome growth of grass, which was kept down with the scythe, but not cleared away—on the contrary allowed to rot on the surface. By and by the trees began to fruit quantities of young roots from the lower parts of their boles into the top-dressing, and the second result was that the next crop of apples was considerably larger and of a much improved quality; the branches were severely thinned to admit light and air, well dusted with quick lime to remove moss and lichens, and they were amply rewarded by the simple application."

THE LAST COACH ROBBERY.

FULL PARTICULARS FROM ONE OF THE PASSENGERS.

[From the Cheyenne Wyoming Territory sun.

Mr. Soule, who came in on yesterday's coach from Deadwood has given us the following facts relative to the last stage robbery near Cheyenne river, about fifteen miles this side of Jenny's, Stockade:

The coach left Deadwood Wednesday June 27th, with a treasure box and six passengers, two of whom were ladies, Mrs. Tom and Miss Boggy, of Deadwood. When about thirty miles from Deadwood they met the up coach and were informed that the stage that left Deadwood on Tuesday had been robbed of the treasury box and the passengers relieved of all the money they had; and that the road agents said they would go through the Wednesday coach near the Cheyenne River. One of the passengers believing it unsafe to take his dust, (somewhere near $400) sent it back by the up coach and came on without it. The others commenced planning to secure what they had taken with them, and when the stage was stopped they at once slipped open the seats and the lining of the wall, and deposited money, watches, jewelry, etc., in the hair stuffing, and patiently waited for the search.

The robbers, four in number, jumped from a deep ravine and hall "covered" the driver and a passenger who was with him on the box with double barreled shot guns, and demanded the treasure boxes. The box from Custer, which had been taken on at Gold Spring ranche, was immediately thrown to them, but the Deadwood box was buried to the golden box and they could not get it off. One of the robbers came to assist them, and in about an hour and a half the box was detached, and the driver was told to drive on, but warned not to drive fast, as part of the gang was further down the road and might stop him. But nothing was seen of them.

The robbers were very cool, but determined to have the treasure, and one of them was in favor of robbing the ladies, but the others were not, as they thought the two boxes would be sufficient.

They told the driver they did not intend to harm drivers, but would kill messengers if they offered to resist, and if any of them were hurt they would kill the driver. They said that the shooting of the driver the night before was not intentional, as the shot was intended for Roberts, the messenger. While they were working to get the treasure box the passengers inside the coach were joking and telling them to hurry up, but the robbers said they had more time than money and were in no hurry, but if a certain was taken they would shoot into the coach.

Mrs. Tom was perfectly cool and collected, and listened to what was said by the gang, and repeated it word for word, although she would have been the heaviest loser had the passengers been searched. Miss Boggy was a little nervous at first, but after the first flush of excitement was over, was as any one.

Mr. Minor of the Omaha Rep. Advertiser was enjoying the prospect of a third-class sensation, and mentally took notes, while the others were awaiting the good joke they would have on the robbers when they came to rob them, for unless the hiding places were discovered there would not be a watch taken and only a few dollars that were kept out expressly to be given up. Dr. Edwards proposed giving them a powder of medicine, and another gentleman had an empty gold sack, but as printers are seldom known to leave anything of value, Mr. Minor and Mr. Soule proposed to interview the thieves and get them to put us to go on highway robbery. The passengers in the box of the coach, who was compelled to work at the treasure box until he was exhausted. The driver then took his place and one of the robbers used it until the bolts were wrenched from the coach and the box secured. Report says there was nothing of any amount in the boxes, so the robbery, though exciting, was of little advantage to the highwaymen. The driver was told that the boxes would be found in the road when wanted.

Destroying Plant Insects.—At this season of the year aphis and thrips begin to be very troublesome, and, from the fact that many greenhouses attached to villa residences are badly constructed, an effectual fumigation by means of tobacco smoke in the ordinary way becomes somewhat difficult. My own house is a case in point. The roof is so loosely constructed that the smoke passes away through the openings before the proper time for destroying. I am therefore led to adopt a plan of my own. Once a week I put some soft soap and flowers of sulphur into four gallons of soapsuds, mixing all well together. The next process is to turn the plants heels upward and immerse their heads in the soapy solution, but before doing this, I prepare a circular piece of stiff card with a hole half an inch in diameter, and a slit reaching from the central opening to the circumference of the card. This is then stretched so as to allow the stem of the plant to be surrounded, and by pressing the fingers of the left hand firmly against it and to the rim of the pot when the plant is turned upside down, no soil can fall into the mixture. By gently moving the head of the plant backward and forward in the solution, the leaves become cleansed of insects, and, as a kind of soapy gloss clings to the leaves after they are dry, insects do not quickly infest them again.—The Garden.

The Bank with the Largest Capital.—The Bank of Commerce of the city of New York has recently reduced its capital from $10,000,000 to $5,000,000. This action on the part of that old and conservative organization leaves the Bank of Nevada, in San Francisco, the wealthiest banking corporation in the United States. It also shows that banking capital is in greater demand on the Pacific coast than at the east. The capital of the Bank of Nevada is now $10,000,000, held by five individuals, Messrs. Flood, O'Brien, Mackey and Fair each own 2,000 of the shares, or $2,575,000 of the stock, and Louis McLane, the President, 5000 shares, or $500,000 of the stock. The only bank on the Continent exceeding it is the Bank of Montreal, whose capital is $12,000,000. The Merchants Bank of Montreal ranks next to the Nevada Bank, with a cap

Republican State Convention.

The Republicans of Maine and all others who propose to support the candidate of the Republican party in the pending election, are invited to send delegates to a State Convention, to be held in

GRANITE HALL, AUGUSTA,

Thursday, Aug. 9th, 1877, at 11 A. M.,

for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Governor, to be supported at the September election, and to attend to such other business as may properly come before the Convention.

The basis of representation will be as follows: Each city, town and plantation is entitled to one delegate and one additional delegate for every seventy-five votes given for the Republican candidate for Governor in 1876. A fraction of forty votes over the number which is entitled to one delegate, will be recognized a delegate. Substitutes may serve only for towns of the county in which they reside.

The Republican State Committee will be in session at the Hall at 10 o'clock, the morning of the Convention.

By order of the Republican State Committee

JAMES G. BLAINE, Chairman.

J. G. SMITH, Secretary.

Republican County Convention.

The Republican voters of the County of Penobscot are hereby notified to meet by delegates in Convention at the CITY HALL IN BANGOR,

On Friday, the 10th day of August next,

at 10 o'clock A. M.,

to nominate candidates for two Senators, for clerk of Courts, County Treasurer, and one County Commissioner, and to transact any other business that may come before the Convention.

Basis—Each city, town and plantation, one delegate, and for every fifty votes cast for the Republican candidate for Governor in 1876, one additional delegate, for a fraction of twenty-five votes so cast in addition to said fifty votes another delegate, and each town or plantation that cast twenty-five votes as aforesaid, and less than fifty, one delegate.

"THE HARP THAT ONCE," ETC

The Boston Advertiser, in a very complimentary editorial upon the appointment of Prof. James Russell Lowell as Minister to Spain, refers to "this quiet Cambridge recluse, whence with calm, keen eyes he looked out upon the hot struggle, often what half understood by those engaged in it, and anon sent forth poems that were more effective than orations in exposing the real significance of the issues at stake." It has special reference to his "Biglow Papers" and asks: "Who has described the diseases of the body politic more accurately?" As the poet will be required to hang up his political harp on the same peg from which he takes down his uniform as an office-holder under the new civil service dispensation, we suggest that the Advertiser might quote with profit the following extract from those "Biglow Papers" which finds an equally significant application to-day

> Massachusetts, to her former self,
> She's where she was with the rest,
> She, that erst'while led onward the van,
> Is now the last to follow;
> While the wheels are round her hub,

> To the opposite end on the road she's on!
> Clang the bells in every steeple,
> Call all true men to the fray!
> The freedom of our people,
> The freedom of their men,
> Is more dear OUR cry to prevent!
> Put the trumpet to her mouth
> Let her blow this message loudly
> To the ears of all the—S.

> Call ye scurvy, call me traitor,
> Heat or freeze ye your mean likes—

BLAINE AND CLAY

The Philadelphia Times, a journal of the Liberal-independent-Democratic persuasion, published recently an elaborate editorial maintaining a parallel between the standing and course of Senator Blaine and Henry Clay, and arguing that the parallel would be completed by the political disappointment of Mr. Blaine. It spoke in very complimentary terms of the distinguished abilities of our Senator and conceded that he commands as enthusiastic support as the Harry of the West, but contends that he will be unable to cope with the power of an administration. A correspondent of the Times, evidently a friend of the editor, has written a letter to that paper indorsing its premises, but dissenting from its conclusion. Both evidently labor under the misapprehension, viz. that Mr. Blaine desirous of making war upon the administration and has his eyes fixed on the Presidency for himself. If we understand Mr. Blaine's position he is simply bent on maintaining Republican principles without regard to personal considerations or controversies, and we are very sure that he is too intent upon performing his duty in the present to bestow any thoughts upon Presidential candidacies in either 1880 or 1884. The letter, referred to, however, has some very striking points and the writer is evidently a keen observer of public men and events. We copy it herewith

To the Editor of the Times.

The historic parallel you draw between Henry Clay's fight on Tyler'sm in 1841-2, and Mr. Blaine's crusade against Hayesism in 1877-9, is eloquent and truthful—all but the conclusion you reach. Blaine has many of the qualities of Clay. He has that wonderful personal magnetism which draws friends to his side and kulls them to his fortunes with cords of love stronger than hooks of steel. He has the boldness of conception, the wealth of imagery, the impressiveness of delivery which characterize Clay's oratory. In dramatic power he is greater than Clay, was, and, while his speeches lack the finish and massive grandeur of Webster, they have an incisiveness of style and an epigrammatic force which are not found in the great efforts of the "God-like Daniel." There is an originality about Blaine which few public men of this country have possessed, and, with a true appreciation of wit, he has knack of illustrating a point by an apt story which renders him one of the most agreeable conversationalists I have ever met. The length, depth and breadth of the feeling for Blaine at Cincinnati you and I saw and know. The enthusiasm his name invoked was as genuine as it was impassioned, compared with that manifested for Bristow, Morton or Hayes. The applause which greeted Blaine's name was like the grand diapason of Niagara beside the quaver of the overflow of a mill-dam. Uninterested, impartial observers, who viewed the scene in the convention from the platform to the old Exposition Hall, and I shall not soon forget the remark you made when Belford, of Colorado, came forward with others to second Blaine's nomination. The response which came from the far-off Rocky Mountains was as unselfish as that which swelled from the pines of Maine, where "the plumed knight" was known in the flesh as almost every fireside.

Henry Clay had no deeper hold upon the affections of his partisans than Blaine has upon the masses of the Republican party. And Blaine has in an eminent degree what Clay had but a limited supply of—political horse sense. He realizes what Clay could never comprehend, that there was a spirit abroad in the land which was mightier than expediency—that puny refuge of Hippuian politicians. Blaine feels "the mustle in the air," and keeps step to it. There is an irrepressible conflict between the North and the South, and the former is as long as the former is a century ahead of the latter in energy, intelligence, humanity, progress. The North grows materially and mentally while the South retrogrades. The census of 1880 will tell the tale. If it is accurately taken but two Southern States will show progress—Texas and Missouri. The relative growth of the different States of the Union is admirably shown by a diagram in the compendium of the eighth census, which I am sorry to say was not used in the compendium of the ninth census by Mr. Walker.—A glance at that diagram is sufficient. Virginia, in the first rank in 1810, was fifth in 1860, while Ohio had mounted from the thirteenth rank in 1810 to the third in 1860. North Carolina, standing 12th in 1810, had gone down to the twelfth rank in 1860. Maryland, in 1810 in the fore front, had fallen to the nineteenth notch in 1860. Kentucky, seventh in 1810, had fallen two degrees in five decades. Georgia, eleventh in 1810, in fifty years barely held her own. In 1880 the retrogression will be much more marked than during the five preceding decades. Blaine has his eye on this national dial. In 1880, if the census is honestly taken, the South will be set back and her representation curtailed. She will resist. Ambitious of power, she will not willingly consent to be shorn of it, while the North grows in her representation as she sloughs in her wealth, population and civilization. In 1884 the Democratic party comes into power. Hayes has made this fact one of the incubus. After that, the deluge. Blaine looks to 1884, not to 1880.

G.

THE MENACE OF THE SOLID SOUTH—EVEN THE TRIBUNE NOW SEES IT.

[From the New York Tribune, July 11.]

He must be a very dull student of political history who cannot read in the progress of events in Mississippi and the other States of the South in which the opposition to Democracy is gradually disappearing, leaving to that party the undisputed possession of power, eventually disastrous results to the organization whose affairs seem to be going on so swimmingly. The South was never so weak as when it seemed strongest and most united; the cause of Slavery never so near and so sure as when its defenders and advocates, in the arrogance of power, and with the assurance of certain success, began to demand, not merely non-interference but the extension and spread over new territory of their peculiar institution. The North was never a unit until the continued encroachments of a United South and the increasing demands of Southern statesmen forced her into a position of defense; nor even then was the North so thoroughly united as the opposing section, for the party which carried a Solid South divided the Northern States with an opponent which could not poll, and was not permitted to poll, a hundred votes south of Mason and Dixon's Line. Never were the prospects of a party fairer for uninterrupted power than when the Democracy held all the South beyond dispute and without opposition, and made an equal fight for ascendancy in nearly all the Northern States. It will be well for those who to-day are counting upon the return of the Democratic party to power through the means of a Solid South, so solid and united that throughout its whole extent, as now in Mississippi, no organized opposition can be found, to remember what came of precisely such a condition of affairs in 1856, when the new party to which it gave rise first took shape.

History on such lines as this does repeat itself. It is no less sure than that effect follows cause. It is the absolutely certain logic of events. No element of chance enters into it, for it is the operation of natural laws which cannot be overcome or turned aside. Leaving out of the question the consideration of differing climates, productions, forms of industry, elements of growth, material resources and popular habits and customs, which might enter into philosophic analysis of the political problem, the relative population of the two sections is the conclusive factor in a sectional contest which gives to such an issue the certainty of a mathematical demonstration. The political action which, in Mississippi and other Southern States, abolishes opposition and sways the whole voting population with one of the two great parties which divide the North, is simply suicidal in character. It has been tried once already, with the most disastrous results. It cannot be undertaken now, or ever again hereafter, with anything like the chance for success it had from 1856 to 1861. For then the South had something like a pretext for its action in the defense of a peculiar institution, and the need of union in a common cause. To-day they are trying a purely sectional party upon a purely sectional basis, with none, not even the flimsiest pretense of a pretext. The party they unite against is the same they fought before, but they were soon beaten on the issue; and upon their pretense of having accepted in good faith the results of the war, they have been treated with magnanimity, and have accepted at the hands of the victors favors for which common decency, to say nothing of gratitude, should dictate some other return than sullen and malignant hate. That they have no reasonable ground of hostility to the party in power, certainly none such as would justify this solid sectional array against it, is attested by the very fact that they are able to take such an attitude. The South is deprived of no right or privilege that any Northern State enjoys, nor are any of her rights in danger of attack or meddlesome interference. They have their own sweet will in everything, and no one interferes or offers to. There is no ground whatever for sectionalism in politics, nothing to excuse a sectional issue or justify a Solid South.

Against a Solid South there is soon to be a Solid North; not so perfectly united as the Solid South, perhaps; that is not necessary; but solid enough and firm enough to possess the Government. It will be stronger than in 1861; stronger for the prestige of past success, the enlarged experience of added years, increased confidence in its own resources, and the consciousness of having earned power honestly and used it worthily. The small margin by which the Democrats carried two or three Northern States in 1876 will crumble away the instant such a sectional issue is presented as that which the South seems anxious to invite. Those majorities were given by voters who were actuated by the desire to have the Southern States restored absolutely to self-government and placed beyond Federal interference, and to see all cause for discontent removed. They have seen this done already under the Administration of President Hayes, and are ready to applaud the party and the policy by which it was effected. Upon such an issue as the action of Mississippi makes imminent for 1880, they will fall in line with the party to which the South opposes as old front. The Democratic management in Mississippi and elsewhere in the South, when the suppression of opposition is carried to the extent of destroying the Republican organization, is something worse than an ordinary blunder. It is a willful and inexcusable repetition of an historic blunder, whose fatal consequences they have not outlived, but see on all hands around them.

Referring to the founding of the Revenue Cutter, U. S. Grant, upon, a cruise, while transporting Secretary Sherman and party, a Washington special says: "There is a good deal of quiet laughter over the fact that with the Chief of the Light House and Chief of the Life Saving Stations on board the party could not keep their steamer off the rocks in the dry time."

WILLIAMSON'S HISTORY OF BELFAST.

We have received a copy of this elaborate and comprehensive work compiled by Joseph Williamson, Esq., and just issued from the press of Loring, Short & Harmon, Portland. The author states that the design of writing a History of Belfast first occurred seriously to him while preparing an address for the centennial celebration of 1870, and since that time he has been engaged in collecting and arranging a fund of interesting materials which have expanded the volume to nearly a thousand pages. The work has evidently been the labor of love, and in performing it Mr Williamson has succeeded in presenting an amount of detailed information concerning the early and more recent history of Belfast which will be highly valued by his fellow citizens, and at the same time has collated an important fund of facts concerning the settlement and early history of the region about Penobscot Bay. To those interested in the annals of Belfast the work is much more than a mere history, the author having given large space to interesting local reminiscences and personal biographies of eminent citizens of the past and of the present day. The book treats of every topic connected with the settlement and growth of Belfast from 1770 to 1875, geographical, personal, political, industrial and social, and all these phases of the career of the place are treated with a fullness and thoroughness of detail unusual in such a work. The volume has a large lithographic view of Belfast folded as a frontispiece, and is inter-persed with facsimiles of historical documents, ancient maps and diagrams, engravings of structures and points of interest and heliotype portraits of many eminent citizens of the place. The work has involved a large amount of research and while Mr. Williamson, as he states, will deem its favorable reception by his fellow-citizens an ample reward, we are sure that his painstaking achievement in the historical field will meet appreciation from a wider circle than the immediate community in whose behalf it was undertaken. The volume is very handsomely published, the paper, printing, engravings, etc., being of excellent quality, and as a distinctively Maine production is creditable alike to author and publishers.

LIFE INSURANCE FRAUDS. The Receiver of the American Popular Life Insurance Company of New York has begun to investigate the books of this concern, and find frauds of the most glaring character. In order to pass the annual investigation of the Insurance Superintendent, pretended sales of stocks were made to the officers and directors and mortgages and bonds taken in payment. When the investigation was over the stock would be returned, and whatever money or representations or money that the parties above referred to paid for them was returned. This fraud was repeated for five years, and the directors in that time swore that they had cash, or its equivalent, amounting to nearly half a million dollars when they did not have a cent. At one time their statement showed that the "surplus on hand" returned was $43,925 in the stocks of various banks and trust companies which the directors represented to be deposited in the Salem Bank. Indeed, they went so far as to state the character and names of the bonds and stocks which made up the sum above indicated. The amount which the directors claimed that was paid for these bonds and the certificates given by themselves for capital stock sold by themselves to themselves, constituted the $87,725 of "surplus on hand" required by law. The Receiver thinks that he has but just begun to discover the numerous evidences of rascality.—Providence Journal.

The colored people of Atlanta, Ga., gave Lieutenant Flipper a public welcome home on Monday evening last, and, judging from the Atlanta Constitution's report, he made a good-tempered, manly speech, acknowledging his pleasure at the courtesy and describing his experiences at West Point. But the Constitution, editorially sneers at and derides him, and thus heads its report of the reception: "Flipper as a fraud. Freeman's protege on Southern civilization; he talks at the reception and makes of himself an ass; the anomalous creature on exhibition; he shows the cloven foot." This is the kind of encouragement the Southern white people are giving the colored men in their efforts to educate themselves and improve their condition. Gov. Hampton talked very beautifully about it at Auburn, we believe.—N. Y. Times.

An "old Republican" in Cleveland, Ohio, writes to a local paper that if he is called upon to indorse the Southern policy by reason of its adoption in the platform of the Republican State Convention, he will stay at home on election day. "Rather than vote for any ticket that approves the surrender in Louisiana," he adds that, in his opinion, the President's friends, if they are wise, will not agitate this subject, "which is distasteful to thousands of earnest Republicans in Ohio."

The call just issued for the annual Maine Republican State Convention is the eighteenth signed by Mr. Blaine, as Chairman of the State Committee. "To those calls" says THE BANGOR WHIG, "and to the voice of the conventions they assembled, the people of Maine have responded in an unbroken succession of glorious victories." It is a grand record.—N. Y. Times.

Yes, and the Republicans of Maine will not tarnish it by recreancy to the principles they have so unflinchingly maintained.

To those papers which were recently abusing Hon. Ben Wade as a "war-horse politician" an "irreconcilable," a "political Bourbon" etc., and which are prematurely exulting over a report that he has fallen in love with the surrender business, we would commend the following cautionary remark by the N. Y. Times:

> It may be well to wait to hear from Hon. Ben Wade direct before setting him down as a very vigorous supporter of the Southern policy.

At a time when such Northern papers as the Boston Journal and others stand ready to utilize any reference to the glorious memories of National triumph, it is interesting to learn that our "conciliated fellow-citizens" of Houston, Texas, took delight in displaying on the Fourth of July the flag of the U. S. steamer Harriet Lane, captured by the rebels early in the war.

The N. Y. Times evidently had in mind the "surrender and disbandment" policy when it made the following sarcastic paragraph:

> Omnibus is the name of a Brooklyn temperance newspaper. It is misnamed. Why should our Union object to anything strong?

The Baltimore American asserts that a Custom House office-holder in that city, having in mind the President's order, actually refused to attend the funeral of one of his intimate friends, for the sole reason that the friend was an officer in the ward organization.

All yet will be sorrow to say it President Hayes has given us a solid South, and the blood of the butchered negroes of Louisiana and the memories of the Hamburg massacre, thanks to his liberal policy, also like sweet incense in the nostrils of the bulldozers and white-liners. It is on this account that we sincerely hope that the Republicans of Ohio and of all the States will speak with no uncertain sound, until he is awakened from the dream in which he is intoxicated. We respect President Hayes for his honest intentions, but we censure him for his stupidity in not seeing what a wholesale sacrifice he has led to the altar.—Meriden (Ct.) Republican.

IRON BIDDEFORD Excitement Over a Supposed Murder

BIDDEFORD July 14 Considerable excitement prevailed in Waterboro and vicinity owing to rumors that Amos Jellison found dead and horribly mutilated on the track of the Portland & Rochester Railroad, was murdered by some Swedes, that the body was placed on the track to conceal the crime County Attorney Emery and Medical Examiner Coroner Norton summon Jurors The body was examined and Dr Hampton of this city in an autopsy which lasted two hours doubted if Jellison was alive when struck by the locomotive and the strong fumes of liquor from his stomach would indicate he was intoxicated at the time Many of the bones of the body were soft as by awls to excite suspicion of an assault Verdict Jury decided that Jellison came to his death by being run over by a locomotive July 13th and killed while in the employ of the company

DOMESTIC NEWS.

POLITICAL MEDLEY Baron and Banks—The Latter Smelling the Speakership

NEW YORK July 14 Dr Leonard Bacon deprecates the spirit of Chauncey M Depew's speech at Woodstock although the latter was never a Democrat Tilden (Bacon) says there is no other course that will unite all Hayes

Banks Hon Alexander Banks says that he has drawn what he should look upon if he had the chance from Banks to the Democratic party that Hayes was fairly elected in New England Banks says the inauguration of the President is a party to be carried out at all hazards and he will give his support

The Bait for Banks

A prominent New England Congressman says that President Hayes told him that he no longer expects a Republican Speaker by the co-operation of the Southern conservatives but thinks that they will support an independent candidate against the Democratic caucus nominee A correspondent repeats the rumor that Banks may receive the support of a few Democrats

Civil Service Reform

The Sun reports that a Western college graduate who at a recent examination for a Government position gave as his answers to the questions propounded to all the other candidates Hayes It was that answer which led to the nomination of the candidate and the secured appointment

The Grapevine Twists of that Civil Service Order

The Herald refraining to the order that all office holders shall not take part in political organization and the President's declaration that the order does not affect Assistant Secretary McCormick asks What has a member of the National Republican Committee do but take part in the organization of political organization The Times says that it is obvious that it is only fair to believe in the sincerity of the President which it is likely to clerks and heads of departments but Chandler did not think the action of the party and President on the Committee national man the immediate resignation of Federal officials from the National Committee

The Tribune says nothing on the subject The Post Washington dispatch says that Assistant Secretary McCormick and the President intended to keep the decision relative to membership of the National Republican Committee secret Leading Republicans in Washington consider the policy which permits an official to retain office but with the highest political office in the organization and prohibits other officials from serving on State or Congressional Committees inconsistent

Very Like a Sun Sensation

Ex U S Marshal Schaffenberg of Colorado attempted to the penitentiary for drawing fraudulent manipulated the ballot of the Republican Legislature in Colorado last fall so as to secure the election of his friend Chaffee to the United States Senatorship, Chaffee promising to have the Government suits against Schaffenberg discontinued Schaffenberg's efforts and his expenditure of $40,000 also carried Colorado for Hayes, but the Washington authorities would not condone the money defalcation He was tried before Judge who had been Chaffee's opponent for the Senatorship, and who imposed a severe sentence on Schaffenberg

More Sun Material

The Sun prints facsimile of a certificate of deposit of $5,000 in the Second National Bank of New York, in Fifth Avenue hotel building, endorsed Pay R B Hayes or order Z Chandler, then, R B Hayes, and two others dated Sept 12th, 1876 the said money having been raised for election purposes by assessment of federal office holders

A sub-committee of the Republican general committee, of which Geo D Weeks was a member, was informed yesterday in an interview with Captain Park naval contractor, that their list of names to be employed in the Navy Yard was of no account as no men will be put to work there, except those qualified as good workmen politics not entering the question

Advertising Decayed and Rebel resort

Governor Matthews of West Virginia is receiver of the bankrupt White Sulphur Springs property and has pecuniary interest in the coming political conference there

It is understood that the President has decided on a trip to Fortress Monroe Richmond up James river and return to Washington at the time of holding the Southern postal convention at Richmond, July 25th The President has not altogether abandoned the White Sulphur Springs trip

Sundry Items

The Republican National Committee will have to do its own work hereafter and clerks going home to vote will lose pay during their absence

Marshal Pitkin stated at Cincinnati yesterday that he and Packard are not going to help Hayes organize the House, a fact which he said Hayes would realize in due time

LOWELL, July 14 Postmaster Rowell has resigned as Secretary of the Republican City Committee

Another Civil Service Notice

The President is reported to favor making public a list of all applicants for appointment to office and the persons who recommended them

NEW JERSEY, The Silk Weavers

PATERSON, N J, July 14 The silk weavers held a meeting to-day, raised $50, and appointed a committee to go to Newark and employ counsel to defend the silk weavers in jail there

MASSACHUSETTS, Suicide of an alleged Murderer

LOWELL, July 14 James A Favor who is under $20,000 bail for assisting to kill the Harrington girl of last Be cember, drowned himself in the canal this afternoon He had a stone tied around his neck by a rope He sat on a box watching the water nearly an hour before taking the fatal leap

THE CHARTER OAK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY Advice to Policy-Holders

HARTFORD, Ct, July 14 The attempt to reorganize the Charter Oak Life Insurance Co, by putting its affairs into the hands of a new and trustworthy board of officers has failed the assets not warranting the gentlemen who were requested to take hold of the company, in doing so more will be made at once for the appointment of a receiver Of such appointment the payment of premiums will cease but policy holders should keep their policies alive until a receiver is appointed as they will have a right to share pro rata in the large property this company owns after liabilities are paid

Official Application for a Receiver

Insurance Commissioner Stedman this P M made application to Judge Park of the Supreme Court for a receiver of the Charter Oak Life Ins Co His petition states that from report made to him he perceives the affairs of said company are much less than the liabilities that it has become necessary and proper that a receiver should be appointed and that all officers agents and attorneys be held enjoined from making any contracts in behalf of said Company or parting with any of its property or doing any act in the business of the company other than such as are usual and common in the daily business

An Injunction Issued

Judge Parker upon the reading of the petition this evening issued a temporary injunction The Sheriff served the papers on the officers of the Company and they are required to answer the allegations and show cause why a receiver should not be appointed by the Judge in this county at 10 o'clock Monday A M Text

NEW YORK CITY A Post Office Contract Colonels Etc

AN AIRY YOUNG WOMAN AT LONG BRANCH

(To the New York Herald)

I has frequently been noticed that Long Branch of all American watering places was free from that vulgar ostentation and display which have deprived New port of much of the popularity which it formerly enjoyed Heretofore all classes of respectable people who went here were treated without regard to the size of their pocket books or the length of their rolls Happily this good feeling of independence and manliness for themselves has taken such deep root in Long Branch that all the attempts which have been made to form cliques distinctions have usually fallen Attempts such as these all efforts to vulgarize and certain displays have been generally frowned down But of course there is some one who will do so sooner or later and such now the exception to be found in the person of a young lady from the neighborhood of Washington who with no regard for public opinion or good taste, makes a ridiculous exhibition of herself upon all possible occasions During the latter part of last and early one of the most fashionable and popular resorts in the country, having small glass windows on each side and looking everything and indeed for all the world like a sentry box This people contemplate upon the shore and then retires Following comes a pretty little maid dressed in a fairy like costume of red and blue flounces and carrying a small bundle With this she enters a large bathing house of which is marked "private" in large black letters In a moment she appears and hurrying to the back of the sentry box sets herself down behind it The bundle is then drawn and the bathing dress is seen to be quite a crowd collected about the sentry box The little maid hands her ground mysteriously nothing and looks intently out upon the ocean When the interest is at its highest and the crowd the largest a second of the little dream begins A lady perhaps twenty five years of age comes down the bluff and enters the bathing house She dressed fashionably in some soft white stuff which clings to and displays her shapely form to full advantage She is a beautiful woman and not a little one The scene of her wedding loses upon her She is dressed in a bathing suit of navy blue silk gauze worn over a pink silk tricot and consists of a short skirt reaching to the knee and a jacket with first one apparently intended to protect her collar bone from the hard sand of the beach and the walks calmly down to the sentry box As she does so it is again noticed that the crowd has no terrors for her As she appears the little maid gives up the sentry box and retreats towards the bluff all wanting her to come in When she seated a number of fashionably attired young men with weak and silly faces and vacant expressions in their respect For a few moments they are greatly relieved by the lady from their presence which she disposes of by turning her back on them and commencing to talk to the young lady who is in the water Finally she leaves the sentry box but the moment she is out of the well tried cry of a woman in fury forward to recover her Well the end is at stake to the battling lady It appears shortly afterward she again takes her place in the sentry box Here she remains for ten or fifteen minutes surrounded by a number of admirers until she leaving the beach the sentry box is removed and the little drama is ended It may be necessary to state that the chief performer in this notable drama is one who moves in what some people would call the best society It may also be necessary to state that the above description is in no way particular

FREEDOM WHEELER'S CONTROVERSY WITH PROVIDENCE.

A Story of New England

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

PART II.

Aunt Hildah and Aunt Hannah took Love and Phœbe over to the red house to live with them, for they found a little note in Lowly's Bible requesting them to take charge of these two, and their father did not object. Phœbe was only sixty; tolerably feeble, she could not stand alone, though she was more than two years old, and Love was devoted to her. Bub and Marah could "fend for themselves," and the old woman who came as usual to Lowly's frequent absences from the kitchen, had promised to stay all summer. But before the summer was over Phœbe faded away like a tiny snow-wreath in the sun, and made a third little grave at her mother's feet; and Lovey grieved for her so bitterly that Aunt Hannah insisted she should stay with them still, and made her father promise she should be their little girl always; certain forebodings of their own prompting them to secure her a peaceful home while they lived.

As for Freedom, if he mourned Lowly Ir was with no soft or sentimental grief, but with a certain resentful aching in his heart and a defiant aspect of soul toward the divine will that had overset his latest and dearest,—a feeling that deepened into savage determination, for this man was made of no yielding stuff. Obstinacy stood him instead of patience, an active instead of a passive trait, and in less than six months after Lowly's death he was "published," according to the custom of the days, the first intention his parents or his children had of the impending crisis being this announcement from the pulpit by Parson Pitcher, that "Freedom Wheeler, of this town, and Melinda Bassett, of Hartland, intended to marry."

Aunt Hildah looked at Aunt Hannah from under her poke-bonnet with the look of an enraged hen, her capital, meekness, with irrigation, and Lovey shrank up closer to Aunt Hannah, her face, to the gray in tears close to her kind old eyes as they met Hildah's, and she cried: "Aunt Hannah when all the words little soul! As for Freedom, he's about as frightened and perfectly unmoved.

"Set his face as a flint," raged Aunt Hildah as soon as she got out of church, and went to take her "mean-spell" in the graveyard, where the basket of doughnuts, cheese, pie, cake, and early apples was usually unpacked on the stone wall, on pleasant sundays, and the aunts sitting on a tombstone and the children on the grass ate their lunch. Today Lovey and Marah were left on the stone to eat their till Bub had gone to the spring for water, and Freedom nobody knew where, while the aunts walked to "talk it over."

"It is," repeated Aunt Hildah, "set his face like a flint. I tell ye he hasn't got no more feelin' than a chunk on a tombstone, Hannah." She didn't call in her grave and he's off to Hartland layin' calves. Calves I guess likely, young "uns are plenty as blackberries, I shan't make no better fuss over 'em, I thought he loved calves to raise." Her heifer calves were dearer of them, mind ye. If we had n't been a pair of fools we should be instructed sooner. If that girl's Aloe at Bassett's darter, things'll be lively." And Lovey Aunt Hildah blew a long breath out of it her steam was at high pressure and could not help opening a valve for relief, and wise Aunt Hannah seized the chance to speak.

"Well, Huldy, I declare I'm beat my self, but we can't help it. I must say I looked forward to the time when he would do it, but I didn't really expect it just yet. We've got Lovey, any way; and Melinda an't pretty enough for a woman she'll be her. I'm full with Bub and Marah."

"That's a fact," returned Aunt Hildah whose utmost soul rejoiced at the prospect of Bub's contumaciousness under a new rule, for he was not a small boy any more, and shingles were in vain, though he still made a certain outward show of obedience. Marah, too was well enough to be left to him in the flesh of any mere stepmother, with her high spirits, untamed temper, and utter wildness, and Aunt Hildah, whose soul was sore,—not because of Freedom's marriage, for she recognized its necessity, but because of its indecent haste, which not only gave no inkling to the Lowly, whom Aunt Hildah had loved dearly, but in the face of talk to all the town, where Wheeler's had been a type of likelihood for many a long year.—Aunt Hildah rejoiced in that exasperated soul of hers at prospect of turmoil to the woman who stepped into Lowly's place quite unconscious of any evil design or desire on the part of her new relatives.

But it was no meek step-mother whom Freedom brought home from Avery's to Bond Wheeler, in his old wagon, some three weeks after. Melinda Bassett was quite capable of holding her own, even with Aunt Hildah, a stepping, buxom woman of forty with clear tan, rough skin, tan and a pair of bright, black dark eyes, an arm of might in the dairy, and a power of work and in an age of it that would have furnished forth at least five feeble people like Lowly's. Freedom soon found that he had married Queen Stock. Bub was set to fight, as to his clothes, and pitched into "as he oddly expressed it, in a way that gave him a new and an abiding respect for the other sex; and Marah contented at once into an alliance, offensive and defensive, with "the new mammy," for Melinda was pleasant and cheerful when things went right, and generally meant they should go right. Marah was fond of children, too, when they were "pretty and lively," and Marah was bright enough to find out, with the rapid perception of keen-witted child, that it was much better for her to be pretty behaved in the kitchen.

But Freedom's eyes saw things to him in Lowly's days unknown of, and he was deluded, he had been lord and master in his house a long time, but here was a people quietly, courageous and oh very curious who made no bones of turning him out of her dominions when he interfered, or letting her own boys without help or advice.

"Land of Goshen" said Melinda to the wondering Aunt Hannah "Do you suppose I'm goin' to live a mean life round in my way all the time, just cos he's my husband? I guess not. I know how to mind to my business, and I expect to 'tend right up to it, moreover. I expect he'll tend to his. When I get hold of his plough, or fodder his team, or do his chopping, I'll be time enough for him to tell me how to work better n' I could pass. I don't nobody's to tell ye Aunt Hannah."

"I'm glad on it,—I'm dreadful glad on it" groaned Aunt Hildah, when she heard of this manifesto.

"That's the talk, she'll sit lighter on him, I'll be bye." Et poor Lowly's had that spunk she might be here to-day. But I guess she's better off," sadly wound up Aunt Hildah, remembering her catechism, no doubt, as she walked off muttering. Are at their death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into Glory,"—an assurance that has upheld many a tired and weary soul more conversant with the language of the Assembly of Divines than that of their Lord and Head, for in those old days this formula of the faith was ground into every infant memory, though the tender gospel words were comparatively unknown.

So the first year of the new reign passed on, and in the next February Freedom was mastered by a more stringent power than Melinda, for he fell ill of old-fashioned typhus fever, a malign evil that lights down here and there in lonely New England farm-houses, utterly regardless of time or place, and in a week this strong man was helpless, muttering delirious speech struggling for life with the fire that filled his veins and consumed his flesh. Aunt Hannah came to his aid, and the scarce neighbors did what they could for him; brother farmers snored away the night in a chair beside his bed, and said they had "got up with Freedom Wheeler last night,"—administrating worse than useless, but yet repeated as a sort of needful observance; and at the end of the first week Aunt Hannah was called away to the "up-chamber" room, where Melinda slept now, and a little boy was introduced into the Wheeler family; while Moll Thunder, a woman skilled in "yarbs," as most of her race are,—for she was a half-breed Indian,—was sent for from Wingfield, and took command of the fever-patient, who raged and raved at his will, dosed with all manner of teas, choked with lukewarm porridge, smothered in blankets, bled twice a week, and kept as hot, as feeble, and as dirty as the old practice of medicine required, till disease became a mere question of "the survival of the fittest;" our grandfathers and grandmothers are wanted to this day, as a healthy, hard working race, because the weakly share of each generation was peaty eliminated according to law.

To the Judge of Probate of the County of Penobscot:

The undersigned, heirs of the estate of Jonathan Brooks, late of Charleston, in said County, deceased, respectfully represent that the said deceased died intestate, and that said deceased left real estate undivided, the owners of which cannot dispose of their separate interests without loss.

Wherefore your petitioners pray your Honor to grant a license to sell, at public or private sale, to the administrator of said estate, Benjamin Frost, all the real estate whereof said Jonathan died seized and possessed, including his late homestead in said Exeter, and convey the same, as it shall seem best for the interests of the parties, and apportion the proceeds among the heirs according to their respective rights therein.

Said real estate is the same described in a deed recorded in the Registry of Deeds of said County.
